Acknowledgements

This dissertation about the Franco-Mauritians could not have been completed without the help of many people; I would, therefore, sincerely like to thank all of those involved, both for their professional assistance and for their friendship.

First of all, I am especially grateful for the support and assistance I received from everyone in the ‘field’, in particular the Mauritians in Mauritius, South Africa and France. To name just a few of those to whom I owe a debt of gratitude: Rene, for demonstrating the value of a good introduction, thus providing me access to many important businessmen; Jean-Pierre, for helping me out with the questionnaire and taking me along hunting with him; Elisabeth, for an introduction into the private educational system and for her hospitality; Yvonne and Max, for the lovely times spent at their campement; Nicolas, for the amusing discussions we had about my research; Emilie, for providing me with shelter and for taking me along to visit her family (who I would like to thank as well); Philippe and his family for the nice dinners; Olivia, her sisters and parents, for their hospitality; Pam, Sharon and Anushka, for their friendship and the welcome distraction they provided from my research; the Beekarry family, especially Bhanesha, for their kindness and lovely food; Jocelyne, for her friendship; Hans and his family, for their generosity; Géraldine, for showing me around in Durban; Kathleen and Firoz, for the nice time I had in Cape Town; Fiona and Ingrid, for their guidance in Paris (and their father in Mauritius with his funny stories); Astrid and Vanessa, for introducing me to ‘everyone’ in Montpellier; and Karine for her help and for the party in Toulouse.

A number of scholars in the ‘field’ were also very supportive - Catherine Boudet, David Lincoln and Bill Freund, thank you for the fruitful discussions we had. Outside of the field, all the anthropologists at the VU University always provided rewarding company, both as colleagues and friends. I would especially like to thank all the PhD candidates. I also very much appreciated the time I had with my roommates Rhoda and Malte: preparing our classes in the bar was not always productive but it was enjoyable. I would like to thank Bram for trying to convince me that ‘neo-liberalism’ exists and the Ceres-PhDs for the welcome discussions about the academic field. From the ‘other’ university in Amsterdam, I would like to thank Malini for our intellectual discussions, Deasy for our fun times and Eelke Heemskerk for his assistance with the network analysis. Very special thanks goes to Erella for (almost) always picking up the phone and for (hopefully) being the best paranimf I could wish for. I would, of course, also especially like to thank my supervisors, Jon Abbink and Sandra Evers. I would never have started on the project had Sandra not believed in me and encouraged me to apply for funding from the very beginning.

Finally, I would like to thank my friends and family living all over: the (expatriate) friends I met in Mauritius, for being receptive when I bombarded them with my research subject; Sylvie, for also listening to all kinds of other nonsense I talked about; my friends ‘from’ Rotterdam, Sander (also, for hopefully being as good a paranimf as Erella), Charles, Niels, Nienke and Monique; the Amsterdam posse made up of Jasper, Michael, Kim, Marjolein, Cello and Natascha, Oswin, Mare, Ginger, Nadine and all the others; my friends from Groningen, for our long-standing friendship; Francesca for listening to my endless stories about white Mauritians and also for not believing that Mauritius exists; and last but not least my family, especially my grandmother Mien, my brother Jorrit (and Cleo), my sister Jante (and Dirk and all their lively family) and my parents Karin and Wiemer.
