Contents

Preface 7

1. INTRODUCTION 9

1.1 Geographical and chronological framework 11

   A diversity of landscapes
   A cultural landscape
   Chronological framework

1.2 View on villa and settlement 15

   Villa research: a rich tradition
   Villa, villa or...? A problematic definition

1.3 An interpretative framework 18

   Rome and the others
   House, space and community
   Material culture and consumption
   Temporality
   Elite and non-elite
   Town-countryside relationships

1.4 Structure of this study 22

2. DATA AND RESEARCH 23

2.1 Constructing a dataset 23

2.2 Basic characteristics: size and distribution 24

2.3 The research background 25

   2.3.1 Research traditions
   2.3.2 Variability in the volume of research
   2.3.3 Scale and quality of research

2.4 Representativity and biases 28

2.5 Questioning the dataset: house architecture, settlement lay-out and regional differentiations 30

3. EXPLORING VILLA DEVELOPMENT 31

3.1 Changing perspectives on villa development 31

3.2 Exploring settlement development trajectories 34

   3.2.1 Developments in settlement organisation per subregion

   The northern sand and clay region
   Flanders
3.2.2 Classifying settlement development trajectories 53
3.2.3 A long development line 58
3.3 Developments in house building: exploring architectural change 61
  3.3.1 Developments in house building per subregion 62

The northern sand and clay region
Flanders
The Dutch and German loess region
The Belgian loess region
Northwestern France

3.3.2 Classifying house development trajectories 74
3.3.3 Elements of change: materials, techniques, porticoes and facades, baths, cellars and interior decoration

The use of building materials
New building techniques
Portico and façade
Bathing suites
Cellars

3.3.4 Differentiation in house building within settlements: shedding light on the difficult category of ‘secondary houses’ 91

Traditional houses
Monumentalising secondary houses

3.3.5 Changes in rural house building traditions in context 95

3.4 Villa development between continuity and change 96

4. EXPLORING THE SOCIAL VILLA. A HUMAN APPROACH TO VILLA DEVELOPMENT 97
4.1 The social study of villas 98
4.2 Variation in settlement scale 99
4.3 The reorganisation of space: constructing new social realities 101
  4.3.1 Reorganising settlement space
  4.3.2 Reorganising house space
  4.3.3 Contextualising change: the North American case

4.4 Breaking with the old and building the new: social strategies in a changing world 112
  4.4.1 Breaking with tradition: vernacular architecture, change and local community
  4.4.2 Durability, monumentality and representativeness: creating new symbols and new social realities
  4.4.3 Symbolically constructing local community
4.4.4 Constructing new lifestyles, creating new networks

4.5 Local and regional heterogeneity and the nature of asymmetrical social relationships within settlements

4.5.1 Understanding local and regional heterogeneity

4.5.2 Elites and peasants: exploring the character of social differentiation and asymmetrical relationships

4.6 Some concluding thoughts

5. VILLA DEVELOPMENT AND THE ORGANISATION OF PRODUCTION

5.1 The wider context of economic developments in the countryside

5.2 Market orientation and developments in agrarian production

5.2.1 Regional developments in arable farming and animal husbandry

5.2.2 Economic development trajectories of individual settlements

5.2.3 Quantifying production: estimates of surplus size

5.3 Exploring the spatial-architectural and social dimensions of production

5.3.1 Secondary buildings and the 'economic compound'

5.3.2 Developments in storage facilities as indicator for economic change

5.3.3 Granaries and the social control over production

5.4 Regional differentiation: recognizing a villa mode of production?

6. SETTLING IN A CHANGING WORLD: A SYNTHESIS

6.1 Reconstructing development trajectories

6.2 Interpreting development trajectories from a multi-dimensional approach

6.3 Interpreting villa development as a process of change: ‘becoming Roman’?

6.4 Avenues for future research

Abbreviations

References

Appendix 1. Site catalogue

Appendix 2. Nederlandse samenvatting