For Eva, my rock.
Acknowledgments

This work would never have been started without the inputs of a number of people. My interest in leadership was piqued by some impressive people I met during my business career. Patrick Ward encouraged me to get the academic chip off my shoulder and believe in myself. Robert Steel supported me during some dark hours of my personal life. Wiet Pot provided the springboard into a new career when the fork in the road looked daunting and atypical. I thank you all.

At INSEAD, a number of professors stood behind me when it was not obvious to do so. Professor Roger Lehman picked me up off the floor when my coaching failed, Professors Kevin Kaiser and Michael Pich took personal risk, projecting me into the TGM Program, and allowing me to contact the participants to undertake this research, for which I hope they have been repaid. Professor Jean-Francois Manzoni helped me transition into a teaching role, on trust more than on data. Each of them put their neck on the line. I am grateful you all gave me a chance.

I coached over 400 groups at INSEAD, more than 2000 executives, and in particular, on the IEP/TGM programs. These people provided the raw material for this work. I learned from you, shared your journey for just a few steps of the way and you rewarded me with my own development. I hope it was as worth it for you as it has been for me.

Dr. Anton Obholzer inspired me with his wisdom when I had given up, and made me laugh when all I wanted to do was cry. You have been iconic, although I know your ego will dismiss that. I respect you and thank you.

Neil Jenin was my coach when I was losing self-belief. Your laser-guided missiles landed in all the right places. You helped me grow, and reinforced my desire to do this work. Thank you.

Two friends believed in me throughout. Tim Johnston sharpened my wits for years and taught me to be rigorous in my thinking. Ingela Jagerblom dared me not to stumble at the finish line. You both have had a hand in this, believe me.

My two promoters Professor Steven ten Have and Professor Erik van de Loo have been invaluable. I learned structure, rigor, detail, logic and tenacity. As with many of these types of undertakings, as we hit some bumps in the road you both helped me to stay on track and ultimately we won together. I owe you both a lot, for your patience and generosity of time. Thank you.

Thanks too to Lilian Dekker at the Vrije Universiteit for finalizing the manuscript and getting me to the ceremony without a hitch.

Professor Elisabet Engellau has been a supporter throughout my academic and professional journey in this area. Never entertaining a word of doubt, you pushed me into places I would not have dared go, and stretched my thinking around senior executives and groups. I never stop learning from you. You are an inspiration.
Professor Manfred Kets de Vries is the voice on my shoulder, the stone in my shoe and the inspirational teacher who showed up and stuck around when others walked away. For 15 years, your relentless dedication to my success has been remarkable, relentless, energetic and unconditional. I will never know why you did it, but I am glad you did. You took a huge weight from me. It changed the game. Thank you.

This all started 50 years ago. I lucked out with a great parent: My mother, Joan Johns has been my consistent cheerleader. No child should be without an enthusiastic, loving and engaged foundational caregiver, but as I have discovered through my work, most people have no such luck. You told me I could do anything. Now I believe you. Thank you for your faith and dedication.

My amazing children have been lodestars in my developmental journey and have shown more interest than is due, given their teenage preoccupations: Harrison, you inspire me with your insatiable curiosity and outdistance me with your intellect. Ella, your inner beauty unfolds and shines more each day; you are a dazzling and insightful woman. Sienna, from you I learned that whatever the challenges, character and courage trump everything. I salute your fortitude. Didrik, for such a young man, you amaze me with your knowledge, breadth and stoicism, but most of all for your kindness. Thank you all for being with me in my life. I love you all.

Eva, without you, this thesis, this labor of love, would never have been started let alone finished. You never wilted, you supported me when I was down, filled the holes I could not fill and gave me room when I least deserved it. You helped me complete this because you instinctively knew what it meant. I owe you very much. To dedicate this to you is the very least I can do, but I do so anyway. I am blessed to have met you, to know you and to tread the path with you.
