

Contents

Acknowledgements	9
Chapter 1 A BEGINNING	11
1. The opening statement	13
2. The approach	15
3. The rules	21
4. The mise-en-scène	27
Chapter 2 HISTORY	31
1. Tracing the noble steps: justifying trials by invoking auto-histories	33
2. Robert H. Jackson: invoking history in a legendary opening statement	38
2.1 The rootedness in history	39
2.2 The break with history	41
2.3 A turning point in history	45
3. The enactment of the future: the Special Court for Sierra Leone	46
3.1 Rootedness in history	47
3.2 The break with history	49
3.3 A turning point in history	50
4. A permanent International Criminal Court: the end of the auto-history?	52
4.1 Historical roots and self-improvement	53
4.2 From novelty to turning point	54
5. Conclusion	55
Chapter 3 MAPS AND LANDSCAPES	57
1. Point of departure	59
2. Mapmakers and map readers	62
3. On your screen is a map	66
3.1 Ordering the local	66
3.2 Imagining the local	69
3.3 Appropriating the local	74
4. End point	78
Chapter 4 THE VICTIM AND THE TRUTH	81
1. The Court, the Victim and the Truth	83
2. The search for truth at the ICC: history and operationalization	87

3. Information and clarification	90
3.1 The Court as embodiment of truth	90
3.2 The victim as truth-teller	91
3.3 Incompatibility of discourses	94
4. Contextualization	97
5. Acknowledgment	100
6. Conclusion	103
Chapter 5 THE IDEAL PERPETRATOR	107
1. Introduction	109
2. The ‘ideal’ perpetrator in the opening statement	112
2.1 A despicable human character	112
2.2 Inhuman evil	117
2.3 Defending the (in)human	121
3. An ambiguous stereotype	124
4. Conclusion	130
Chapter 6 AN ENDING	133
List of Abbreviations	143
List of Publications	145
Bibliography	147
Summary	157