Table of Contents

Acknowledgements ............................................................... 9
Abbreviations ........................................................................ 12

Introduction ........................................................................ 14
The Puzzle: Continuity or Change in French Security and Defense
Policy and Identity? ................................................................. 14
Setting the Stage: French Security and Defense Policies in a Nutshell ...... 16
Tackling the Deficits of Existing Interpretations ............................... 20
A Poststructuralist Discourse Analysis, and Constructivism ............... 24
Outline of the Dissertation ..................................................... 29

Part I: Theoretical Framework and Research Design .................... 34

1 Autonomy or Integration, Continuity or Change: Research on French Security and Defense and Its Deficits .......................... 34
1.1 French Security and Defense during the Cold War .................... 34
1.1.1 Autonomy, Influence, and Grandeur – The Establishment of Gaullism ........................................................................ 34
1.1.2 The Gaullist Legacy ........................................................ 40
1.2 NATO Rapprochement under Mitterrand and Chirac, and the Launch of CSDP in the 1990s ............................................. 42
1.2.1 The End of the Cold War: Identity Confirmed ....................... 43
1.2.2 Balancing the Americans with CSDP? ................................. 44
1.3 Sarkozy: Continuity or Change? ............................................ 48
1.4 Conclusion: Deficits of Current and Existing Research ............... 54

2 Ideas, Constructivism, and Discourse Analysis – Poststructuralist
Methodology and Ontological Constructivism ............................ 60
2.1 Ideas, Identity, and Discourse ............................................. 60
2.1.1 Ideas and Identity .......................................................... 60
2.1.2 Discourse, Knowledge, and Power ..................................... 63
2.2 Constructivism .................................................................. 66
2.3 Foucauldian Discourse Analysis ........................................... 77
2.4 Critical Discourse Analysis and the Problem of Extra-Discursive
Causation ............................................................................ 79
2.5 The Essex School and Poststructuralist Explanation ................. 82

3 Methods and Data: Applying Discourse Analysis and Interpretive
Techniques for an Explanation of French Security and Defense
Policy and Identity .................................................................. 88
3.1 Mechanisms, Methodological Individualism, and Generality
– Moving beyond Elster ......................................................... 90
3.2 Logics as Tools of Poststructuralist Explanation ....................... 96
3.3 Applying the Essex School with Interpretive Policy Analysis .......... 99
3.4 A Brief Note on Critical Explanation .................................... 105
INTRODUCTION: STRUCTURAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE FRENCH FOREIGN POLICY DISCOURSE .................................................................................................................. 116
A Tour de Force of French Political Parties ................................................................................................................. 119

4 CHIRAC’S FAILED NATO REINTEGRATION AND THE LAUNCH OF CSDP
   – IDENTITY CONFIRMED ................................................................................................................. 122
4.1 The Empirical Apparatus and Outline of the Chapter ............................................................................. 126
4.2 NATO: The Nature of the Beast and the Scope of its Missions
   – New Times not New enough? ........................................................................................................... 128
4.3 The U.S. as Partner or World Hegemon, and the Nature of Franco-American Relations ...................... 133
4.4 Grandeur, Responsibility, and their Transfer to Europe ......................................................................... 139
4.5 The Support of European Foreign, Security, and Defense Actorness
   as Logical Consequence of Political Integration and Necessity ..................................................... 146
4.5.1 Launching European Security and Defense Policies .................................................................... 153
4.5.1.1 First Embodiment of Integration: Institutionalizing Security and Defense in the EU ................. 153
4.5.2 Criticism of Integration, and the General Rejection of CSDP ......................................................... 159
4.6 Europeanizing the Alliance: The Prospect of NATO Reform as Condition for Reintegration .............. 164
4.6.1 NATO Reform, the Europeanization of NATO, and the Principle of Complementarity ................. 166
4.6.2 Policy Conditionality and its Directionality ...................................................................................... 171
4.6.3 NATO as a Tool for the French and for Europe .............................................................................. 173
4.6.4 A Loss of Autonomy and a Retreat from CSDP? ........................................................................... 177
4.6.5 Continuity or Change? .................................................................................................................. 181
4.7 Autonomy and Integration .................................................................................................................... 185
4.7.1 General Aspects of Autonomy, and the Question of Influence .................................................... 185
4.7.2 Sacred Institution: Nuclear Autonomy .......................................................................................... 189
4.7.3 Influence by Integration – In the EU, but also in NATO? .............................................................. 191
4.8 The Failure of Reintegration ................................................................................................................. 194
4.9 Conclusions ........................................................................................................................................ 198
What has not been found ................................................................................................................................. 203
5 NATO REINTEGRATION 2007-2009: STRENGTHENING CSDP AND ENDING AMBIVALENCE – IDENTITY CHANGE STARTING ............................................. 205
5.1 The Empirical Apparatus and Outline of the Chapter ............................................. 207
5.2 Breaking the Ice: Reforming NATO, Strengthening European Defense, and Uniting the Western Family ......................................................... 209
5.3 Franco-American Relations Re-signified!? ......................................................... 222
5.4 Losing Autonomy or Gaining Influence? The $1,000,000 Question .......... 227
5.5 Losing Specificity? The Symbolic Dimension of Reintegration, the Question of Grandeur, and Multilateralism ....................................................... 231
5.6 Continuity or Change? .......................................................................................... 238
Wrapping-Up: Intermediate Summary ................................................................. 241
5.7 Strengthening CSDP: Project Pragmatism, European Headquarters, and the Re-launch of Franco-British Cooperation ..................... 242
5.7.1 First Embodiment of Integration: Institutions and the Lisbon Treaty ......................... 244
5.7.2 Second Embodiment of Integration: Capabilities and Burden-Sharing .................. 247
5.7.3 Franco-British (and German) Cooperation: Getting Relations Straight ........................................................................................................ 252
5.8 EU-NATO Complementarity and the Continuing Quest for CSDP ........ 255
5.8.1 The Europeanization of NATO and the Principle of Complementarity .......................................................... 255
5.8.2 Policy Conditionality and Directionality Re-signified ........................................ 261
5.9 Autonomy and Integration .................................................................................. 263
5.9.1 General Aspects of Autonomy, and the Question of Influence ...................... 263
5.9.2 The Final Frontier? Nuclear Autonomy ............................................................. 267
5.9.3 The Normality of Integration and the Struggle for Influence ..................... 268
5.10 Conclusions ....................................................................................................... 273
What has not been found ...................................................................................... 278

6 ALLIED EFFECTIVENESS AND THE NORMALIZATION OF FRENCH CSDP POLICIES DURING THE LIBYAN WAR – IDENTITY RECONSTRUCTED .... 279
6.1 The Empirical Apparatus and Outline of the Chapter ....................................... 280
6.2 A Brief History of the Libyan War ...................................................................... 281
6.3 Europe under Attack: The Identity Project Facing Immobility in Security and Defense ........................................................................................................ 284
6.3.1 Immobility and Limitation .............................................................................. 287
6.3.2 Institutions, Capabilities, and the General State of CSDP ................................. 290
6.4 Franco-British Defense-Cooperation: Identity and Effectiveness ................... 292
6.5 NATO, or the Better Half of European Defense? ................................................. 298
6.5.1 The Self-Evidence of NATO-Lead and the Role of the U.S. ......................... 299
6.5.2 EU-NATO Cooperation: European Defense through the Atlantic Alliance .......................................................... 304
6.6 The Taming of Autonomy .......................................................... 308
6.6.1 The Containment of Autonomy, and the Ability for Nuclear Integration ..................................................................................... 308
6.6.2 Integration, Influence, and the Financial Crisis ...................... 309
6.7 Conclusions ............................................................................. 312
What has not been found................................................................ 315

CONCLUSIONS ................................................................................. 316

EPILOGUE: CONTINUITY OR CHANGE WITH FRANÇOIS HOLLANDE? ........ 326

BIBLIOGRAPHY ............................................................................... 331