Acknowledgement

Completing this dissertation reflects a collective achievement rather than my individual achievement. I should recognize that this dissertation would have never been finished, without cooperation and help from other people. I feel indebted to the kindness and generosity of my supervisors, colleagues, friends, and families. During the past five years, they have provided me with valuable support, advice, guidance, as well as constructive criticisms, which altogether contributed to the advancement and completion of this dissertation. I therefore dedicate this section to express my sincere gratitude to each of them.

First, I would like to give my special thanks to Esther van Leeuwen. As a supervisor, she is the great source of inspiration for my work with the current dissertation. No matter how busy she was, Esther van Leeuwen has always been available in supervising me. She has helped me to better formulate new ideas, devise proper research designs, and write high-quality papers. In addition to these intellectual skills, I also acquired emotional skills under her supervision, which made me become well aware of how important it is to maintain discipline, perseverance, and confidence in my research. My big thanks also go to Mark van Vugt, who is a very supportive promoter to my PhD project. He has always taken care to find prompt solutions to the problems I encountered, and has been very earnest in motivating me to tenaciously pursue a PhD, without which I could not complete this dissertation. Fattah Hanurawan is an Indonesian advisor of my PhD project. I would like to thank him for supporting the project from the outset, and for collaborating in this dissertation.

This dissertation is a social product, given that to complete it I was dependent upon support from two main institutional networks. The first is the Netherlands Fellowship Programmes (NFP), which had awarded me with a 4-year fund to carry out my PhD project. Second are the universities with which I have been affiliated: VU University Amsterdam, Leiden University, and the University of Brawijaya. They have provided me with many resources from which I profited in finalising this dissertation. I therefore thank those institutions for their valuable support.

This dissertation does not merely constitute an outcome. Rather, it is also a process within which I have built and relied on networking with other colleagues. I thank to Piet Jakobus Msen, a colleague who made it possible to approach indigenous people in West Papua and persuade them to take part in my research. Nina Haves, Adi Cilik Pierewan, Gien Ning, and Yuni Nurhamida also deserve my special thanks, as they have assisted me in recruiting participants among the indigenous Papuans and Javanese in Java. No less important is the support from my colleagues and students at the Department of Psychology, University of Brawijaya. I really benefited from the support and accordingly feel grateful for it, their having facilitated my recruitment of participants and administration of field research in Java. My special thanks also go to Adam Baciník for his valuable and helpful comments for improving this dissertation.

One chapter in this dissertation involves a documentary. In making this audio-visual material, I relied on the help from some important persons to whom I would like to express my gratitude. The first is the leader of mass organisation in Central Java who has been willing to play a key role in the documentary. Second are the students from STAIN Pekalongan, Central Java. By virtue of their working professionalism, the documentary could be finalised on time and in a high, satisfying quality.

I have some friends with whom I have enjoyed spare time during my PhD study. With them, I also discussed my research topics and got advice with regard to important information on how to successfully proceed and finalise this dissertation. For their contributions, I would like to thank Bung Hengky Kurniawan, Bung Hizky Leonard Lalujan, Pak Aloysius Gunadi Brata, Bung Firmansyah David, Kang Ibnu Fikri, Cak Fahrizal Affandi, Nils Koebis, and Wenty Marina Minza.
Finally, I thank my family, especially my beloved wife Esti Zaduqisti and my kid Nurus Sidqiya Sajidah. They have provided me with unconditional social and emotional support, either in happy times or hard times. The lessons learned from what they have done for me during my PhD study is very rewarding, pointing to the importance of having a motivation to always ‘move on’ and developing a ‘never-despair mentality’ in dealing with the completion of this dissertation.
